

I have heard that the FCC is considering the expansion of LPFM (low-power FM) stations. I want to state that this has the potential to affect numerous existing radio stations negatively, especially those who have FM translators, both regionally and nationally. In all fairness to existing FM broadcasters, any expansion of LPFM needs to be restricted to frequencies that are not already being used by FM stations AND translators.